Pastoral Morocco examines the history, structure and recent dynamics of pastoral development in Morocco. It assembles knowledge and expertise from various disciplines, such as Geography, Anthropology, Sociology, and Agronomy, and unites scientists from Morocco, Europe and the United States. All contributions stem from intensive, long-term fieldwork and they debate relations between pastoral development, socio-spatial mobility, and livelihood security.

We would like to express our gratitude to those who made this project a success, in particular to the authors. Pastoral Morocco is also indebted to the research center Difference and Integration, located at the Universities of Leipzig and Halle-Wittenberg. In its context, the editors conducted five years of research, and organized the international conference ‘Globalization and Pastoral Livelihood Security in Morocco’, in Rabat in November 2005, under the auspices of the Institute Agronomique et Vétérinaire Hassan II (IAV). Neither the conference nor much of the preceding research would have been possible without Jeanne Chiche, who participated and shaped the project from its very inception. We are equally grateful to our partners from the IAV for the years of productive collaboration. In particular, we thank Fouad Guessous, Mohamed Agbani, Najib Aqesbi, and Fatema Mossadeq. Very special thanks go to Dieter Strauss for hosting the conference in the Goethe Institute of Rabat.

Editing this volume would not have been possible without the tremendous support and efforts of many individuals. Thanks are due to all of them. Most of the papers were translated from French to English, a tremendous task Sandra Calkins performed with outstandingly skillful dedication. Gordon Winder from the University of Auckland carefully reviewed most of the articles. Lea Bauer spent a huge effort in the cartography and map design. Steven Calkins did a final English proof-reading. Special thanks go to Ute Terletzki for her dedicated and professional organization in Leipzig and in Rabat, and for her immense effort with technical editing and layout. All of the remaining errors are, of course, our responsibility.

Finally, we are grateful to Stefan Leder and Bernhard Streck for accepting this publication in the series ‘Nomaden und Sesshafte’. We also are indebted to the German Research Foundation for financing our research in Morocco, the conference in Rabat and this volume. Last but not least we are grateful to the publisher for producing Pastoral Morocco.

Note: Transliteration of terms from Arabic and Berber languages is the responsibility of the individual contributors. Spelling of toponyms that are used more frequently was standardized (e.g. Fes, Marrakech). The boundaries and names represented and the designations used on the maps in this volume do not imply official endorsement or acceptance by the United Nations. The Moroccan currency is Dirham (Dh); in April 2006, 100 Dh amounted to 9.15 €.
